WOMAN AND HOME.

THE DISCOURTESY OF THE FAIR SEX TOWARD EACH OTHER.

Learn to Lighten Labor—Training of Daughters—A Decorative Novelty—The Domestic Money Question—Middle Morag—Neighbors—The Baby—Notes.

However deferential and courteous women are in their bearing toward men, they are far too apt to be rude to their own sex. They indulge in presumptions toward each other that men of their class would never think of inflicting upon men. This discourtesy of women toward their kind is none the less rudeness and vulgarity because it is on an average of a small, whimsical, petulant type. It is not only evidence of imperfect breeding, but, suppose, though unconscious, of a defective character.

They give scant heed to each other's rights. They push and jostle each other at theatre entrances on matinee days. They fill up that portion of a seat in a suburban train they do not occupy with parcels. If other females no less intrepid in absorbing the prerogatives of others than they, but a little behind them in appearing, ask for the space to be cleared they grumble and scowl, adopting the most ungracious manner possible.

A sweet faced young woman, accompanied by an old lady with white hair, slowly walked through a suburban car the other afternoon. The young lady passed wherever some well dressed woman sat with the evidence of her day's shopping beside her. Not once made a motion of invitation to share her seat. Each woman looked intently down or in an opposite direction.

At last the young lady stopped before one woman whose face indicated the possession of a kindly nature.

"Madam," she said sweetly, "will you allow me to assist you in disposing of your packages, so that my mother can sit down beside you?"

The amiability in the placid face of the woman addressed was dispelled as by magic at the gently voiced request.

"I want to keep my things together conveniently," was the ungracious reply.

The answer appeared to nettles the girl into swift assertion. She placed one hand on the seat and looked the speaker in the face with unflinching determination.

"Did you pay two fares?" she inquired.

"That has nothing to do with it. I hurried to catch the train, so that I could have plenty of room, and people who are late have no right to come disturbing those who have taken pains to get here first."

"Ah! I think I will have my mother sit down here notwithstanding," was the cool answer, as the young lady placed the articles on the floor and assisted her mother to the place they had occupied.

"I shall speak to the conductor," snapped the owner of the things. "It's a pretty how-do-it people who have a lot of packages have got to divide their seats with others who have none."

When the conductor came through the ill-mannered dame contented herself with merely glaring significantly at the girl, who stood leaning against the end of the car.

In shops where the customers and clerks are nearly all women, the manners of both buyer and seller are frequently abominable toward each other. The women in suit departments wear an air of defensive indifference unless the customer they chance to have is one well known to them and a good purchaser. The saleswomen are arrogant and expectant of rudeness on the part of the patron, and prepare for it by the assumption of a manner no less objectionable than the one they resent.

They are the continual victims of the thoughtless selfishness and petty slings of their sex. Their patience is ripped and frayed to shreds every day by the uncalled for demands of idle women who are not shoppers, because they seek the stores for amusement and not to buy.

The woman who has nothing to do is very apt to seek the shops for entertainment. She does not stop to consider that her diversion is taken at the expense of a sister, and she forgets or does not know that the salesgirl whose time she occupies in showing her gowns or wraps is not only hired to display garments, but to sell them. She is careless of the fact that if the young person's look at the stock and makes but a small showing in sales, while her hours have been taken up in showing goods, her ability as a saleswoman is doubted in consequence. She forgets that the result is at the best not the increase of salary the girl is hoping for. It is not only the possible but the actual result of her amusement that the girl is "choked off" or discharged for incompetency.—Janet Dale in Chicago News.

Learn to Lighten Your Labor.

American women are not, as a rule, of as robust constitutions as those of other countries. Whether the women themselves are to blame for this or the climate of the country (that, by the way, is made to mother a good many ill she has had to land in making), it is hard to determine, but that American women are not strong is an established fact. You, then, knowing this, have no right whatever to allow your constitution by excessive work where there is no necessity for it. Don't have white clothes for the little ones to play in, but if you do have them, make them plain. Throw away all ruffles and collars in every "day wear" for yourself and children. Don't wear lace or linen collars every day. They are not worth the trouble in doing them up, and if sent to the laundry wear out in such a little while that they do not pay in the end. Use the roughest ruffing for every day. It cannot be washed, but it is very pretty, and when soiled can be thrown away, and in the end be much cheaper than collars that are washed every week. Particularly is this ruffing suitable to warm, sultry weather, as it retains its shape and is much cooler than linen collars, which are the most uncomfortable kind of neckwear for hot weather.

With the exception of a few articles, don't iron but very slightly the plain clothes. Only the sheets for the spare bed need be ironed all over. The rest need not be present only at top and bottom. The plain underclothing need get but a slight ironing, sent if the family is large, none at all. Such people prefer to wear their underclothing rough dry, claiming that it is healthier. The women and best housekeeper I ever knew was an old lady who would never have her underclothing ironed on this score. She never used an iron pot or kettle when she could get a tin or some other light ware to answer the same purpose. She claimed that though it would wear out quicker than iron, yet in the end it was cheaper, for it saved both time and strength. It saved time, for when in a hurry whatever she wished to cook could be done in one half the time than if iron were used, and it saved strength, for in lifting from one part of the stove to the other it required very little exertion. Some may claim that the tinware is not conducive to health, but, however, if the tin is kept clean there is very little danger to be feared on this score.

Don't have heavy furniture, more particularly in your dining room or kitchen. Light furniture, both in color and weight, will save a great deal of unnecessary work. Dark col-

Monkeys' Susceptibility to Tears.

If monkeys are susceptible of laughter and of manifesting delight, they are also capable of showing sorrow and of weeping. Humboldt says the samitri of Peru are extremely sensitive, and that at the least cause of distress their eyes fill with tears. It has been asserted, on the other hand, that savages are incapable of weeping. This assertion, according to Humboldt, is contradicted by numerous observations. Hottentots have been seen to weep, as well as American Indians and the natives of Tahiti. However, the susceptibility to tears seems to diminish, pari passu, with sociality and sensibility in the human family; per contra, real tears have been observed among dogs, deer and gazelles. Here another supposed characteristic of man appears.—Henry Howard in Cosmopolitan.

Experiments Concerning Digestion.

A Dr. Chudnowski recently experimented on twelve Russian soldiers with a view to discovering the effect of cold applications to the epigastrium on the rapidity of digestion. Each soldier was regaled heartily; his epigastrium was properly refrigerated and the exciting contest began. Unfortunately for lovers of the weed, the competitors were divided into smokers and non-smokers. The rival teams digested their very hardest, but the non-smokers outdistanced the others by the space of one hour.—New York Sun.

Stuart, the Portrait Painter.

Gilbert Stuart had long been a fashionable artist in London, when he determined to return to his native land that he might paint the portrait of the one man he admired, George Washington. In England he had hobnobbed with princes and dukes, but when he entered the room where Washington was waiting to give him a sitting he was embarrassed. "It was the first and only time," said he, "that I ever felt awe in the presence of a fellow-man."—Youth's Companion.

Wealth of the United States.

The aggregate wealth of the United States is now estimated at $43,000,000,000, but the taxable property of the country is only a little more than one-third of this amount.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Hard Drinking in High Society.

The hard drinking that is indulged in by high society must be something quite huge. I have not been to the opera this season without finding the boxes dotted with young men whose condition ran the gamut from babbling foolishness to stupid silence. The lobby between the acts would be full of them, zigzagging to and from "the cooler," as they facetiously term the barroom. The contingent that society sends to the bar is by far the most riotous that you can find there, and I hear of a number of scandalous exhibitions of behavior at private balls and parties.

On one occasion, especially, two prominent youngsters, who resided into a ball at Delmonico's, were ejected by the floor manager. On another a dinner party at a club resulted sadly to the marriage of the walls of the dining room by the edibles, which the merry revellers converted into missiles in the exuberance of their vicious humor.

Nor is it the sterner sex alone that claims the attention of the Blue Ribbon League. The number of society women who look upon the champagne when it bubbles is apparently on the increase. There is a table for every entertainment of Miss X's or Mrs. Y's open devotion to the cup, and stories are rife at the clubs of the indiscretions into which their appetites betray certain belles in the charmed circle of upper London. There is an extraordinary amount of drinking done at the places popular for ladies' lunches, and most of the swell milliners, I am assured, provide liberally against the thirst of their patrons.—Alfred Trumble in New York News.

Chinese Theatre Orchestra.

The orchestra is usually composed of seven musicians, who sit at the back of the stage, the beginning to the end of the performance. The leading instruments are the fiddle, the cymbals, the gong and the drum. The fiddle tyrannizes over the rest of the music, and rises superior even to the clash of the cymbals. It has only a single string, and the notes evolved from it pierce the ear like a knife. The man that performs upon the fiddle alternates with the cymbals, while his next neighbor beats, in rhythmic measure, on a huge brazen gong, which is pendant from the ceiling. The other performers play upon drums, one of metal and the other of polished wood. The music is said to bear a striking resemblance to that of the Egyptians. It is all in the minor key, and from a distance it has a weird and melancholy sound. Heard near at hand, however, it has a tendency to produce headache and to rasp the nerves.—George H. Fitch in The Cosmopolitan.

The Barroom Dog.

The barroom dog that drinks beer is quite a common curiosity. So much so indeed that it is no longer a curiosity to the roustabouts. I remember once going into the bowels of the East side to see a Newfoundland dog that belonged to a barroom and drank beer and spirits with any one who treated it. It was a sad dog, as I remember it. Its eyes were bilious, and it had a listless gait and a depressed air. Disposition had evidently told upon it. Since that time I have got to know dogs large, small and medium, all of which are addicted to their pots, and I enjoy the honor of acquaintance with a Bovey goat that will, its owner assures me, drink a keg of beer if any one will find the keg. When a goat falls into ways of dissipation, I am told, it becomes more completely and hopelessly changed than any animal except man himself, and from what I have myself seen I am inclined to believe that this is the fact.—Alfred Trumble in New York News.

The Value of London Land.

It has been ascertained, with regard to the Imperial Institute, that the site of about five acres recently secured for the admiralty and war offices is valued at $200,000, or rather over $160,000 per acre; that now vacant in Charles street, opposite the India office, is less than an acre, and worth at least $100,000; probably another acre might be secured by private contract, so that the value of a limited site in this position would not be less than $400,000.

It has been suggested that a single acre not far from Charing Cross might be obtained for $224,000. Two and a half acres on the Thames embankment have been offered for $200,000, and it is stated that six acres may be procured from Christ's hospital for $200,000. Another good central position has been suggested, consisting of two and a half acres, which has been valued at $200,000.—London Court Journal.
